Mr. Nagel said: "There have occasionally in of a little in New England and a little in California the bees are nowhere making a surplus.

"We can't explain it. It is inexplicable. Last year dry weather and a scarcity of flowers had something to do with it, but this year there is an abundant flora. Bees usually draw pounds of sweetness from white clover, but although the fields are white with blossom there is no honey in it. This is the story that comes from all parts of the country. The bees stored a little black honey, known to the trade as honey dew, early in the season, from the oak and box elder trees, but this is unsalable. You may tell the housewives that honey is going to be very scarce and high this year."
